ABSTRACT

The phenomenon of Cross Gender Dance Cover K-pop dancers is increasingly emerging both in big cities such as Jakarta, Bandung, and Surabaya and small cities such as Purwokerto. K-Pop Cross Gender Dance Cover dancers in this study are groups whose male members imitate idol girl groups (male to female). The rise of Cross Gender Dance Cover dancers has led to perceptions that tend to be negative from the community and the surrounding environment. For example, Cross Gender Dance Cover dancers are considered as "waria". The purpose of this study is to analyze and understand more about Cross Gender Dance Cover dancers seen from the front stage and back stage. The research uses Erving Goffman's Dramaturgy theory to analyze the front stage and back stage. The research technique was carried out by interviewing research informants, observation, and direct documentation as well as taking references from articles published in journals. The results showed that the self-identity of Cross Gender Dance Cover dancers displayed on the front stage includes the use of attributes, such as costumes, makeup, character deepening, attitudes and behaviors that reflect the idol being imitated (idol girl group). On the backstage the dancers show their original identity as men with daily activities as their roles and responsibilities.
